The fact that Hitler's Germany had to fight a two-front war -- in the west, against the U.S., the U.K. and other allies, and in the east against Russia -- played a critical role in that country's defeat, and without it, the course of the war may have been different.

The Effects of the Two-Front War on Germany During WWII

World War II. The most famous example of a two-front war was the European theatre during World War II, when Hitler's Nazi Germany had to confront the Western Allies on the west and the Soviet Union to the east. The Germans were unable to repel either of the advances on the two fronts and eventually lost the war.
